Could Israel strike Iran over nuclear concerns?

Israel will attack Iran's nuclear sites if crippling international sanctions are not imposed this year, an Israeli former defence official said on Wednesday, in a reminder of the risks of war next year in the Middle East.

Amid rhetoric on all sides, many analysts believe the risks of a strike by Israel, even one not endorsed by its main ally the United States, are significant.

Sarkozy: Militärisches Atomprogramm des Iran ist eine "Gewissheit"

Für Frankreichs Staatschef Sarkozy besteht kein Zweifel daran, dass der Iran sein Atomprogramm zu militärischen Zwecken betreibt. Sarkozy bezog sich bei einem Treffen mit Abgeordneten der Regierungspartei UMP auf entsprechende Geheimdiensterkenntnisse. Der Iran versuche, sich ein Kernkraftprogramm zuzulegen, dass auch auf die Vernichtung Israels abziele, sagte Sarkozy. Er weigere sich deshalb, dem iranischen Präsidenten Ahmadinedschad die Hand zu geben.

Sarkozy übte zugleich deutliche Kritik an Israel. Er habe Regierungschef Netanjahu gesagt, Israel müsse seine - so wörtlich - verrückte Siedlungspolitik einstellen.

Iran says 'new framework of cooperation' agreed with IAEA

Iran has agreed new terms of cooperation with the UN atomic watchdog regarding the agency's investigation into Tehran's nuclear activities, a top Iranian official said here Tuesday.

But the head of Iran's Atomic Energy Organisation, Ali Akbar Salehi, declined to say what the new cooperation would entail. A source close to the International Atomic Energy Agency told AFP that nothing substantially new had been agreed between the two sides.

Misreading the Iranian Situation

The Iranians have now agreed to talks with the P-5+1, the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council (the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Russia and China) plus Germany. These six countries decided in late April to enter into negotiations with Iran over the suspected Iranian nuclear weapons program by Sept. 24, the date of the next U.N. General Assembly meeting. If Iran refused to engage in negotiations by that date, the Western powers in the P-5+1 made clear that they would seriously consider imposing much tougher sanctions on Iran than those that were currently in place. The term "crippling" was mentioned several times.

Obviously, negotiations are not to begin prior to the U.N. General Assembly meeting as previously had been stipulated. The talks are now expected to begin Oct. 1, a week later. This gives the Iranians their first (symbolic) victory: They have defied the P-5+1 on the demand that talks be under way by the time the General Assembly meets. Inevitably, the Iranians would delay, and the P-5+1 would not make a big deal of it.

Osama Bin Laden Is Dead Says Asif Ali Zardari

According to Pakistan President Asif Ali Zardari, the al-Qaida chief, Osama bin Laden, is no more. But he has requested for more international help as those areas, which the Americans feel Osama is hiding, can be explored.

Stressing that Pakistan government was fighting against the militants, he added that their efforts were being hampered due to lack in resources. In an interview to BBC to mark his first year in office as President, Zardari had maintained his emphasis on Pakistan's ailing economy and has sought more assistance from Western countries.

For the second time in 10 days the Taliban have targeted Afghanistan's domestic intelligence agency.

A spokesman for the Kandahar governor's office, Zulmai Ayobi, said three suicide bombers tried to get into the NDS office in Kandahar city this afternoon. One detonated himself at the front gate while two others opened fire on the security guards and tried to force their way in.

The top U.S. intelligence official says the country is safer from al-Qaida and is attacking it more aggressively than in the past because it has a more sophisticated understanding of the terrorist organization.

National Intelligence Director Dennis Blair told reporters Tuesday that the group behind the Sept. 11 attacks is under more pressure from the United States than it has ever been.

Secretive spending on US intelligence disclosed

Intelligence activities across the U.S. government and military cost a total of $75 billion a year, the nation's top intelligence official said on Tuesday, disclosing an overall number long shrouded in secrecy.

Dennis Blair, the U.S. director of national intelligence, cited the figure as part of a four-year strategic blueprint for the sprawling, 200,000-person intelligence community. In an unclassified version of the blueprint released by Blair's office, intelligence agencies singled out as threats

Iran's nuclear program, North Korea's "erratic behaviour," and insurgencies fuelled by militant groups, though Blair cited gains against al Qaeda.

Study Faults Bush's Emphasis On Daily Intelligence Brief

Under President George W. Bush, the President's Daily Brief -- the highly classified intelligence paper delivered each morning to the White House -- rose to "an unprecedented level of importance," with negative consequences for the intelligence community, according to a new study by the Brookings Institution.

These included "skewing intelligence production away from deeper research and arms-length analysis" and driving analysts to choose "the latest, attention-grabbing clandestine reports from the field," says the study, released Tuesday, called "The U.S. Intelligence Community and Foreign Policy: Getting Analysis Right."

At times, Bush had analysts who had been working on high-concern issues he read about in the daily brief, or PDB, conduct hour-long "deep dives" on those topics, with top policymakers present. "Not infrequently the briefings and surrounding discussions by key players would produce immediate policy decisions," the study says.

US is shifting spy strategy to counterintelligence and cybersecurity

The top U.S. intelligence official said counterintelligence and cybersecurity would be given new emphasis under a four-year strategic plan he unveiled Tuesday, Sept. 15.

Director of National Intelligence Dennis Blair told reporters that although combating extremism, issuing warnings, countering weapons proliferation and supporting military operations overseas remain major priorities, the 16 agencies that make up the U.S. intelligence community must also work to keep abreast of technical innovations and developments in information technology.

US annual intelligence budget '$US75b'

The United States spends $US75 billion ($A87.02 billion) a year on intelligence, a top official says, revealing for the first time the overall cost including military-related activities.

Director of National Intelligence Dennis Blair gave the full budget figure as he delivered his 2009 National Intelligence Strategy on Tuesday, a blueprint outlining the priorities for the next four years.

Budgets for America's 16 intelligence agencies and their 200,000 employees were until 2007 a closely-guarded secret. The figure for non-military intelligence work was given as $US47.5 billion ($A55.11 billion) last year.

Seventy-five billion dollars ($A87.02 billion) a year represents well over 10 per cent of the annual US defence budget of around $US650 billion ($A754.19 billion).

The Discreet Charms of CIA Morale

Opponents of accountability for intelligence excesses, such as former officials and media commentators, speaking out against Attorney General Eric Holder's recently announced inquiry into CIA's torture and detention program, complain that scrutiny hurts CIA morale. Such a stance betrays a simplistic, overgeneralized, and idealized view of CIA culture, and the most recent appearance of the CIA morale canard is political cherry-picking: before Holder announced his preliminary probe, even before Obama promised an end to torture and detention, morale at CIA was sagging.

For anyone who's ever worked at CIA, or even paid attention to the news about CIA, that morale problem thing has been around a long, long time, which kind of takes the punch out of the claim that more investigation leads inexorably to less effective, lower quality intelligence and frowny-faced spies.

When the Lehman Brothers banking firm collapsed a year ago this week, it prompted a financial panic that spread around the world. In February, with unemployment soaring and international trade in free fall, Adm. Dennis Blair, the director of national intelligence, advised Congress that the global economic crisis had replaced terrorism as the country's "primary near-term security concern."

U.S. intelligence analysts had concluded that a sharp drop in international money flows raised the prospect of destabilizing social unrest in countries with scarce resources and fragile governments.

Brief aus den USA: Der Alltag der Spione

Die Geheimdienstarbeit von heute wirkt weit weniger romantisch als in der Vergangenheit. Aber damals wie heute waren die Leistungen der Spionierenden kein Zuckerschlecken.

Romantik und politische Realität des Spionagewesens kamen diese Woche bei zwei Veranstaltungen in Europa in den Blickpunkt. Könnte man die beiden verbinden, würde das vielleicht die zerstörerischen Kämpfe zwischen US-Kongress und CIA etwas mildern. Ein neuer Zugang zum Geheimdienst, auf politischer Nachhaltigkeit basierend, ist vonnöten.

Five dead, documents destroyed at Russian GRU base

A fire at a Russian military intelligence base has killed five servicemen and destroyed important secret documents.

The blaze rapidly spread through an administrative building of the military intelligence services in the city of Tambov, about 500km southeast of Moscow. Two officers and three soldiers died in the fire, the defence ministry said, adding that a further seven people were taken to hospital for treatment. "The fire seriously damaged a secret section which contained particularly important state documents," an official from the Russian special services told news agency RIA-Novosti.

"According to initial reports, the damage is considerable."

Israels Premier „Bibi“ Netanyahu zu Geheimbesuch in Moskau, zunächst abgestritten, jetzt zugegeben, die Arctic Sea auf dem Weg zu den Kanaren, nach anderen Quellen bereits dort, angeblich nichts außer Holz an Bord. Aber die russischen Ermittler brauchen noch ein paar Tage - für ein Schiff von 100 Meter Länge.

Knapp drei Wochen sind sie schon an Bord, auch für russische Ermittler eine verdammt lange Zeit. Mikrobiologen, die mit einem Mikroskop das Schiff abgesucht hätten, würden wohl kaum länger brauchen. Was immer sich an Bord befand, und nicht aus Holz bestand, die Öffentlichkeit soll und darf es nicht erfahren. Eine offenbar „gesäuberte“ Arctic Sea soll jetzt den maltesischen Behörden übergeben werden und zwar nicht in einem Schwarzmeerhafen, sondern wesentlich näher zu der Stelle, an der das Schiff aufgebracht wurde.

From An Internet Hub for Citizens Action Network in Ukraine: The tragic events of September 1999 in Buynavsk, Moscow and Volgodonsk, linked with open terror and civilian victims marked the beginning of a new phase for our country, living under permanent terrorist threat. Up till then Russia had not experienced terrorist acts on such a scale.

The September terrorist acts were virtually the grounds for the beginning of the Second Chechen War. The course of events linked with this created the conditions for an enforcement body oligarchy to effectively come to power in Russia, and for the curtailing of many civil and political liberties and a move away from the democratic foundations of the constitutional system.

Israeli Foreign Minister Avigdor Lieberman's recent five-country tour of Africa was more about building up intelligence links and selling arms than diplomacy, according to one Israeli intelligence specialist.

Lieberman didn't sign any arms deals during his swing through Ethiopia, Kenya, Nigeria, Ghana and Uganda. But Israeli officials estimate there are African arms contracts worth hundreds of millions of dollars waiting to be grabbed by Israel's export-hungry defence firms.

Yossi Melman, who writes extensively on Israel's intelligence establishment, questioned whether Israel should be engaging in such activities instead of sending in agricultural advisers and medical and educational experts to such economically distressed countries.

SAS trains Libyan troops

The SAS has been ordered by the Government to train Libyan special forces despite the country having armed the IRA, The Daily Telegraph can disclose.

For the past six months Britain's elite troops have been schooling soldiers working for Col Muammar Gaddafi's regime, which for years provided Republican terrorists with the Semtex explosive, machine-guns and anti-aircraft missiles used against British troops during the Troubles in Northern Ireland.

Sources within the SAS have expressed distaste at the agreement, which they believe could be connected to the release of the Lockerbie bomber.

Eight years after the attack on New York, intelligence reports from captured western recruits suggest the terror network is weakening.

Eight years after the September 11 attacks in the US, it is clear that the threat to the UK remains. Britain is regularly cited as a target in militant propaganda and several dozen young British men, security sources say, travel every year to Pakistan to realise their ambitions of violent jihad. But if the will to strike remains strong, the ability of al-Qaida's central leadership to commission or execute spectacular attacks looks weaker than sometimes thought, experts say.

MI6 reports own officer over torture claims

Police in London said Friday they are investigating an allegation of torture involving a British intelligence officer.

The Metropolitan Police said it was asked by the attorney general to investigate the case. The British Secret Intelligence Service -- also known as MI6 -- referred the case to the attorney general, the police said. "It is very important that any such allegations are thoroughly investigated," said William Hague, the foreign affairs spokesman of the opposition Conservative Party. "Torture or complicity in torture is unacceptable, immoral, and counterproductive." Hague urged the government last month to look into allegations of torture of detainees at the U.S. Navy base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and in Egypt, Pakistan, and Uzbekistan. His request followed a report from Parliament's Joint Committee on Human Rights that recommended an independent investigation into the allegations.

Foreign Secretary David Miliband said Friday that the British government "wholeheartedly" condemns torture.

Strathclyde Police has gone live with the next generation of covert policing technology - abmpegasus Source Management - the covert human intelligence source (CHIS) management solution from criminal intelligence IT specialist, ABM.

The latest addition to Strathclyde Police's intelligence portfolio provides an updated management platform, ensuring that intelligence data is managed effectively through centralised data collation and control, thereby reducing the administrative time associated with the entire CHIS lifecycle. abmpegasus is the most advanced covert intelligence system available and enables Strathclyde Police to have a more centralised view of their entire covert intelligence estate, in addition to enabling valuable covert intelligence to be passed directly to the Scottish Intelligence Database (SID).

Der Präsident des Bundesnachrichtendienstes Ernst Uhr lau sieht eine erhöhte Terrorgefahr für Deutschland. Im PHOENIX-Kamingespräch (Ausstrahlung am Sonntag, 20. September um 17.00 Uhr) sagt er, dass "Deutschland wegen seiner außen- und sicherheitspolitischen Positionierung für Al Qaida und andere Netzwerke eine zusätzliche Attraktivität gewonnen hat." Die Auffassung, dass man aufgrund der Nicht-Beteiligung am Irakkrieg "nicht in ein Angriffskonzept von Al Qaida" passe, habe er nie geteilt. "Die Bundesrepublik ist exponierter Part der Unterstützer im Kampf gegen den internationalen Terrorismus und von daher aus der Sicht von Al Qaida Teil der Kreuzritter", so Uhr lau. "As happened last year ... top jihadist forums affiliated with Al Qaeda began experiencing technical problems, culminating in their ultimate closure on September 10, 2009," the group said in a statement.

According to SITE, members of other jihadist forums expressed annoyance and "confusion" at the inability to access the Web sites and forums where they share updates and messages.

Polish daily newspaper Rzeczpospolita reports that an Iraqi chemist who allegedly knew of Saddam Hussein's plans and who had been involved in the country's top secret project on weapons of mass destruction, known as Site 555, arrived to Poland in 2004 with his family as a refugee and is living and working in the Eastern European country since.

The scientist, known as Doctor Z, who lived in Bagdad at the outbreak of the Iraq War in March 2003, was involved in a uranium-enrichment project. Site 555 British intelligence services and others alleged was the site of a top-secret project initiated in the 1980s, directed by Saddam Hussein himself. The project was said to have gathered Iraq's top scientists together to work on the developing an arsenal of chemical and atomic weaponry. The scientists were privy to vast amounts of information and worked closely with the Iraqi dictator. Site 555 project was verified by the Polish Military Information Services, specifically by a code-breaker known as LYHUNT/103.

Gordon Brown issued an unequivocal apology last night on behalf of the government to Alan Turing, the second world war codebreaker who took his own life 55 years ago after being sentenced to chemical castration for being gay.

Describing Turing's treatment as "horrifying" and "utterly unfair", Brown said the country owed the brilliant mathematician a huge debt. He was proud, he said, to offer an official apology. "We're sorry, you deserved so much better," Brown writes in a statement posted on the No 10 website.

Turing is most famous for his work in helping create the "bombe" that cracked messages enciphered with the German Enigma machines. He was convicted of gross indecency in 1952 after admitting a sexual relationship with a man.

Autor Günther K. Weiße, der selbst den Großteil seiner militärischen Dienstzeit in der Nachrichtengewinnung verbrachte, beleuchtet in diesem Buch die verschiedenen europäischen Nachrichtendienste und deren Funkaufklärungsorganisationen. Untersucht werden aber nicht nur die „großen“ Geheimdienste der führenden Kriegsparteien Großbritannien, Frankreich, Deutschland, USA und Sowjetunion, sondern auch der Beitrag kleinerer Länder, wie der skandinavischen Staaten, Polens, Italiens und der Schweiz, zu Funkaufklärung und Geheimdiensttätigkeit.

Anschaulich spürt Weiße dem Stellenwert nach, den die Nachrichtendienste auf den einzelnen Feldzügen einnahmen. Ob Polenfeldzug oder Westfeldzug, ob im Mittelmeerraum, an der Ostfront oder auf dem Balkan – überall spielten die Geheimdienste eine unterschiedlich große Rolle, ihr Einfluss auf das Kriegsgeschehen lässt sich bis in die letzten Kriegsphasen nachweisen. Teile der Geschichte des Zweiten Weltkriegs entpuppen sich unter diesem Aspekt ein wenig anders als bisher beschrieben.

Günther K. Weiße war von 1964 bis 2007 unter anderem bei der NATO und im Bundesministerium für Verteidigung Bonn tätig und arbeitet seither als Berater für namhafte deutsche Sicherheitsunternehmen und als Journalist "

Spy series lights up Ramadan

Imagine Egyptian journalist Samia Fahmi's dilemma. She had travelled to Rome to meet Nabil, the man she loved. But once there, she began to suspect that her lover was an Israeli spy, and that he was trying to recruit her to join the Mossad, the Jewish state's intelligence agency. Torn between love for Nabil and love for her country, she returned to Cairo, and did what any patriotic Egyptian woman would do: She informed on her lover.

In Cairo, the intelligence officers she presented with her suspicions convinced her to become a double-agent, and to infiltrate the Mossad.

And so begins Harb al-Gawasis, or War of the Spies, perhaps the most critically acclaimed series released this Ramadan. Samia and Nabil are fictional lovers caught in spy thriller set during the period between Egypt's 1967 and 1973 wars with Israel, a period known to Egyptians as the War of Depletion.
